Emergency Aid Organizations become auxiliaries of the Red Cross. The Emergency Aid of Pennsylvania Headquarters.

1428 Walnut St., Phil., Pa.

Miss Jessie B. Barclay, Chairman Bedford Co. Emergency Aid.

Bedford, Penna.

My dear Miss Barclay:—

In answer to many inquiries received by the Emergency Aid as to whether the work should continue as before or if all foreign relief organization are to be amalgamated with the Red Cross, the Emergency Aid of Pennsylvania would like to inform the Bedford County Emergency Aid, which has been of such splendid assistance to the organization, that at a conference of the Foreign Relief Organization and the Red Cross it was decided that in substance the memorandum presented by the committee, plans to invite the various national relief societies to become national auxiliaries of the American Red Cross. Each auxiliary will retain its name and organization and carry on its present work in the United States. This means that an auxiliary may continue to raise funds in its own name, as it has heretofore.

This arrangement was approved in substance by the conference which will meet again to perfect details and consider the problem of distribution of relief abroad. In the meantime all relief organizations will continue their work as heretofore. The pending negotiations for a closer alliance must not be permitted to interfere with the steady flow of relief through the accustomed channels.

Yours very truly,

M. B. Warburton, Acting Chairman (Mrs. Barclay Warburton.)

Many Will Die From Cold and Hunger in Europe During Winter

All Nations Face Greatest Catastrophe This Winter Karl Von Weigand Learns in Sweden—Death to Bring Peace to Many.

By Karl Von Weigand, International Staff correspondent, the last American newspaper man to leave Berlin and who has just arrived from the Scandinavian Countries.

"All Europe will stand on the very edge of a catastrophe this winter which may prove to be the greatest in modern history. The prospects are simply appalling. It is no longer a question of Germany alone hungering and freezing this winter. The greater part of Europe is feeling various stages of famine in food and coal, some even worse than Germany. All Europe is confronted with calamity. Under nourishment and malnutrition lowering the natural resistance to disease, is smothering broad pathways to epidemics. None can foretell what may happen when the people hunger and freeze. Empty stomachs and bitter cold has ever been a combination with terrible potentiality for evil. There is not a cabinet or Chancellor in Europe, neutral as well as belligerent, that is not trembling at the appalling prospects confronting them in their respective countries. What all the belligerent armies in Europe have not been able to bring about, namely the end of this war which has brought all this misery, perhaps may be more successfully achieved by the horrible spectacle of famine. In any event the winter will bring peace to thousands of non-combatants—the peace of death. To many of us it means that the American people either have but a poor knowledge of conditions in Europe today or do not realize their significance and possible consequences."

This is the statement made to men by one of the highest officials of the Swedish government the day before I left Stockholm from where I have just arrived. It is a part of more than one hour's conversation on conditions in Europe today. It was only upon my promise that I would not quote him by name that he talked freely and with amazing frankness of the situation in Europe upon the basis of confidential diplomatic and commercial advice received from every European capital. His statements, supported by data and official reports which he took out of his desk and showed me and of which I am at liberty to give but a small part were largely corroborated by diplomats, both neutral and belligerent in Copenhagen and Christiania.

John E. Metz

John E. Metz, one of East Providence township's best known and highly esteemed citizens, died at his home, near Graceville, on Thursday evening of last week from pneumonia, aged about 60 years. Deceased was united in marriage to a Miss Foor, who preceded him to the spirit world about three years ago. He is survived by two sons, George Metz, who resided with his father, and Charles Metz, of Altoona, Pa., one daughter, who is married and resides in Altoona, and one brother, Samuel Metz, of Graceville, also survive to mourn the death of a loving father and brother.

Mr. Metz was an honest, up-right christian gentleman and had a host of friends who deeply mourn his death.

Funeral services were held at the Graceville Lutheran Church last Sunday at 10 a.m., the Rev. G. H. Middlesworth, of the Breezewood charge, officiating.

142,735,000 TONS OF COAL USED BY RAILROADS LAST YEAR.

Railroads of the country used more coal in 1916 than in 1915, the total having been 142,735,000 tons, or 24 per cent. of the entire output. Figures given out by the Geological Survey to-day show that of the total coal consumed 136,000,000 tons was bituminous and 6,735,000 anthracite, representing increases respectively of 11.5 per cent. and 8.5 per cent. over 1915. In addition, the roads used 22,950 tons of coke.

I have just returned after six months' observation with the eyes of an American, in Germany and Scandinavian countries; I was one of the last, perhaps the last American correspondent to leave Germany. While other American correspondents were given permission to depart upon the declaration of war by Congress, I was held for several weeks upon order of the military authorities. Every courtesy was extended to me as was the case with practically all the Americans still in Berlin at that time, but I had to report to the police daily while many of the other Americans reported but once or twice a week. Through the good offices and influence of one of the leading members of the Reichstag, General Von Ludendorff who is practically the chief of staff of the German armies, ordered that I be permitted to depart. An official denunciation from Vienna that I was a spy for the State department and had been during the entire war which appears to have had its origin in Copenhagen, threatened for a time to upset matters for me. About the same time Count Ernst Zu Reventlow made a sharp attack on me in a speech declaring that I had worked against the submarine campaign and made the absurd charge, that I had returned to Germany to try and have the U-boat war called off as a basis for peace negotiations. I had stated in an interview in Christiania, with the correspondent of the Frankfurter Zeitung, which had been widely reprinted in Germany, that Germany had made a blunder when it suddenly declared the ruthless U-boat warfare and that it would have been better for Germany had she remained quiet two months longer and left the matter of peace in the hands of President Wilson upon the basis of his "peace without victory."

During those weeks in Germany I saw the foundations laid of the democratic evolution of Germany. In this and following articles I shall give my observations—the observations of an American in Germany, Austria and other countries of the Central Empire and the last few weeks in Scandinavia.

Unlike some others I have no "revelations" to disclose, no "exposés" to make and no "secrets" to tell, I have been in Germany since the Morocco crisis in 1911, I am one of only three or four American correspondents who have seen the war from the German and Austrian side from the very first day. It is a singular fact that of all the books that have been written about Germany in this war, none has been written by one of these American correspondents who have seen the most and therefore should be best qualified.

ON MEMORIAL DAY

By MOLLY M'MASTER.

Violet Nash tied on her big drooping summer hat and stood before her mother.

"I am going to walk out to the little old cemetery on the edge of the village, mother. Do you mind?"

The mother's eyes filled quickly with tears. She knew why the girl was going; she knew, too, that her daughter's heart was as full as her own on this, the first Memorial day, since their son and brother had been lost on the battlefield of Europe.

Violet smiled through the tears that had forced their way into her eyes. "I won't be long, dear, and I'm taking a basket of our lovely lilacs and snow-balls." She kissed her mother and walked down the gravel path to the gate and out along the country road to the cemetery that had been a landmark long before Violet and her mother had come to Marionville, Ia., from their home in England.

John Nash, the son and brother, had answered the call of his country and had gone to battle. He had never returned, and only the news of his brave death had come to the family.

Today, when flags were at half-mast for the heroes of other wars, Violet felt that she must go somewhere, do something, in memory of her dear brother. The only thing that seemed to be possible would be to take flowers to the grave of some other soldier and place them there in memory of her brother.

On an old stone, gray and weather-stained, she read the name of "John James Evans." Here was a man named, as had been her brother. The inscription told her that the man died a hero in the Civil war.

Violet knelt down and began to arrange clusters of white and purple lilacs near the headstone. Tears finally streamed down her cheeks and she sat down upon the grass and tried to control her emotion.

When she stood up a man stood beside her. He held a pot of flowers, old-fashioned blooms. He was looking at the flowers on the grave.

"Did you do that?" he asked Violet.

Violet nodded.

"John James Evans was my grandfather," he said. "I come every year. It is good of you," he said. His look questioned her further.

"I saw no flowers on the grave," Violet said softly, and I wanted to decorate the resting place of some brave hero today," she said. "My—my brother was lost a few months ago in France, fighting with English troops, for our country."

John James Evans—for he was the third of that name in his family—looked down at her and noted the exquisite beauty of her face, tear-stained though it was. "It was good of you to pick out my grandfather's grave," he said, hardly knowing what to say.

Violet shook her head. "It's nothing—to you, of course," she said. "But it has done me good, and it has spared mother the pain of seeing me give way to weeping. I just had to, for mother—and I have tried so hard to bear up for each other—oh, so hard," she said.

After that there was a long silence, during which neither young person seemed to know what to do or say.

"Would you let me take you home?" John Evans finally asked.

"I don't go far," she protested.

"I have my little runabout just outside, and I'm sure your mother wouldn't mind," he explained.

Violet looked in his eyes for a moment. "No—I don't believe she would. We don't know very many Americans, for we have kept much to ourselves. Do you live in Marionville?" she asked, as she rose.

"No—in Cedarstone, five miles beyond. I have a drug store there and it seems to be successful that I can't get away."

When Violet reached her own gate she insisted that John come in and explain to her mother how it had come about.

Mrs. Nash, naturally reserved, looked surprised, but the straightforward look in the young man's eyes and the general manner of him seemed to reassure her, as it had reassured Violet.

"We'll be glad to have you join us in a glass of cold buttermilk, if you care to wait," Mrs. Nash said, after a few moments.

"Do stay," urged Violet.

And John Evans did stay. He thought he had never seen anyone in the world so beautiful as this little English girl.

Violet walked to the gate with him when he was able to take his departure. "Mother and I will be glad to see you at any time," she said, shyly.

"Thank you, I shall come, Miss Nash," he said, formally.

"My good old granddad was always my guard, a angel," John James Evans said to himself on the way home. (Copyright, 1917, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

The Essential Spirit.

"Can you recite the Declaration of Independence?"

"No," replied the man in khaki. "All I can remember is, 'When in the course of human events it becomes necessary.' And I expect soon to land somewhere in France to ascertain what's necessary and then attend to it."

One Compensation.

"What do you think, Jane? This paper says the country will soon run out of the supply of oils of all kinds."

"Then I won't have to be bothered all the time with sending your auto to the clothes to the cleaners."

The Dreamer

By Miriam Lee

(Copyright, by W. G. Chapman.)

"Well, young man, what do you think of it?"

"It's a dream."

"Ah, is it not; indeed—of grandeur, of opulence, of vast uncounted millions!" exclaimed old Prof. Peter Burton.

"I don't mean it in that way," supplemented Lysle West. "I regard your proposition as visionary, impracticable and unreal."

"Unreal? ha! ha! you couldn't make me more hopeful than by saying that," chirped the old man gleefully. "It's what has seemed unreal and impossible that has scored the greatest triumphs. Everything is unreal until it is accomplished. Then it becomes commonplace. But that is neither here nor there. You know all about mechanics. I know all about the precious metals. You have been recommended to me as a skillful engineer. I wish to employ you. I offer you a fair price for your services for say, ninety days. You act as though you don't want the job. Then say so—I will hire somebody else."

"Not at all," Lysle hastened to say, "only your scheme appeals to me as chimerical and I must speak the truth."

"Oh, we'll pass over that," exclaimed the professor lightly. "All you have got to do is to come out with me to Basin Valley. You are to examine the vicinity and lay out a plan for me to commence operations. When we have settled on the point where these will begin, you are to figure out the equipment I shall need. I want to get a start. I want to get my boring machinery on the ground. I want to go down a couple of thousand feet, so as to bore out a solid rock core showing the strata formation. Then I shall go to New York and interest the millionaires in the marvelous World's Treasure Corporation, Limited, prove my prospect and go for that vast core of pure gold in the middle of the earth."

"Very well, I am your obedient servant," said Lysle, only half convinced that his employer was not a feather-brained lunatic.

Lysle West, out of work and tired of the city, was not disinclined to earn a liberal salary out among the wilds of nature. It was only now on the eve of departure that the professor revealed the real details of his undertaking.

"What I'm after," he told Lysle in all seriousness, "is to discover the vast core of pure gold that has dripped through the upper strata when the earth cooled off. Naturally the heaviest mass would sink the farthest. I can prove that by samples taken down a few thousand feet. I am in hopes that two thousand feet down as a limit, the core of Croesus can be located. Then, boring into the inexhaustible mass of precious metal, we can begin to unearth it in cart loads, a constant stream of it. Oh, I have figured it all out scientifically. It will cost money, but the initial development work done, capital will flow in to me to carry out my work."

Lysle had learned that the old professor had once made a rich strike in the far West involving enough to keep him from want for the rest of his days. This he had ventured on an alleged radium mine, where he had sunk all he had.

"Then my wife died," the professor explained to Lysle. "Her estate went to my daughter. Ah, Dorothy! my only solace in the world—soul of generosity, she has given me the last ten thousand dollars of her little fortune to finance me for my experiment. She, at least, believes in my plans and myself. Dear, loving, loyal Dorothy!"

It was a desolate spot that to which the professor took Lysle a week later. It appeared that he had purchased a large acreage, known as Basin Valley, remote from roads and cities. Its former possessor had tried agriculture, but had failed. He had left a habit-house, in which the professor and Lysle installed themselves quite comfortably. A mule team from the nearest settlement had brought on a load of provisions. There were fish in a near stream and game in the woods and, therefore, no lack of good living.

All day Lysle measured, calculated and explored to find the ideal spot for drilling. All day the professor submitted surface specimens of ore and earth to analysis. They were fully occupied and rather than lose time took a cold bite for dinner.

"I'm able to cook a good breakfast," observed the professor. "You can stop work an hour earlier than quitting time afternoons and prepare supper. Then we will have at least two good meals a day."

One day, a few minutes before noon, the two workers dropped instruments and hammer and started for the house. Suddenly both halted and stared at one another in surprise.

"Did you hear that?" sharply exclaimed the professor.

"Why, yes," replied Lysle—"it's the dinner bell you brought with the provisions. Someone is ringing it."

"And from the house. What can it mean?"

"Perhaps the Chinese housekeeper you tried to get at Oreville has changed his mind and has come on."

"No, see," cried the professor excitedly. "It is a woman, a girl. Why, it's Dorothy!"

Dorothy it was, Dorothy Burton, the old professor's daughter, and as he ran toward her and her father gathered her up in a happy embrace, Lysle West stood spellbound at realization of the marvelous beauty of this unexpected visitor. He shyly acknowledged an introduction, absorbed, bewildered, drinking in her rare loveliness.

"I just couldn't keep away, papa, dear!" confessed the winsome sprite. "I got longing for you and I was tired of boarding school. And come in the house, both of you, and see the famous dinner I have all ready for you."

It was, indeed, a rare, delicious meal, and Dorothy persisted that she was elected permanent cook and housekeeper. Her presence held Lysle to the work he was convinced was bound to result in nothing, and one day he told Dorothy so.

"I don't know how far you are right," she said, quite sadly, "but before mother died she told me to live close to him and his ideas. As to the fortune, that is nothing to his love."

So time went on and the last $5,000 went into engaging a drilling crew. It was expensive experimental work. The professor eagerly inspected the cores as they were bored out.

"West," he said one morning, "the drillers have closed their contract, for my capital has run out. I am disappointed in the borings. They do not all carry out my theories as to weight and propinquity. I give it up."

The speaker was strangely subdued that evening. Lysle was himself depressed, for he foresaw a separation from the girl he had learned to love. Only Dorothy was her natural, cheery self.

Dorothy slept lightly. Her father and Lysle were slumbering heavily and did not hear her get up to answer an urgent summons at the front door. They heard her call up the stairs a few minutes later, and in wildly excited tones:

"Oh, father! Mr. West! Come at once, hurry, please! Something wonderful has happened over at the diggings! The drill foreman is here."

"What is it?" shouted down the professor, and the reply came in echoing tones:

"You've bored for gold; and you've struck something just as good—all the biggest gusher in the state!"

It was true. They believed it within the hour, after a visit to the diggings. They knew it the next day, when all speculators thronged the place, offering fabulous prices for the surrounding land.

The professor was rich. And Lysle West, too, for within the week he discovered that all along, although he did not know it, he had possessed the most opulent treasure in the world—the love of sweet, loyal Dorothy.

ROMANS BUILD MANY ROADS

Many of Those in France Have Left No Traces but Location of Others is Known.

Caesar's army marched the 45 miles which lie between Reims and Soissons in one day, a fact which proves the existence of roads in that part of Gaul. Tin from Cornwall took one month to reach the Rhone from the French side of the Channel, the route being complicated by the necessity for crossing rivers and mountains. Some of the roads of old Gaul were mere cart tracks, which ran through the interminable forests, and these have left no vestige of their presence. But the direction of some of the roads which the Romans built is known. Two of them ran through Paris, forming a crossroads, one the modern Rue St. Jacques and St. Martin, and the other, running in a southeasterly direction, the Rue St. Antoine and the famous Rue de Rivoli.

The direction of the great Via Domitiana also is well known. Starting from Lyons, it crosses the Gard Rhaut region from northeast to southwest; and passes over the Rhone at Arles, running through Nimes, Pont Ambroise, Substantion, St. Thibery, Beziers, and Narbonne, the Narbo Martius of the Romans, and the city which is famed in these days for its heather honey. Not far from St. Thibery, the Via passes over the Herault and the Ort, and then follows the ancient road of Colombiers and crosses the Capetian by a Roman viaduct, the Pont Salinis at Pontserme.

DANGERS OF MEDICINE

Little Talks on Health and Hygiene by Samuel G. Dixon, M. D., LL. D., Commissioner of Health

Drugs are not to be fooled with. Those capable of doing good are also capable of doing much harm.

An intelligent, experienced and conscientious physician will never prescribe drugs until he has made a thorough diagnosis, unless in a desperate, emergency case. It requires years of study—to be able to determine the characters of diseases and distinguish one from another with certainty.

There are many sicknesses whose outward signs are so much alike that the lay person or one uneducated in medicine could not recognize a difference between them. For example, if one had a bad pain in the lower part of the body, in that region generally improperly called the stomach, one might consult a doctor over the phone, or read a remedy in a newspaper or on the label of a quack medicine bottle, or else go to a druggist for help.

The one recommended under such circumstances might be supposed to have castor oil in it or some drug that would act as it does. The remedy is taken and the active movement of the stomach or, rather, intestinal tract, is produced. The patient grows much worse and the physician is then called.

The patient has been surprised that the pain has grown worse and the temperature has leaped up high even though a drug was taken. The doctor soon determines that his patient is dangerously ill, that the first pain was not an ordinary pain but due to an abscess from appendicitis. This abscess had been broken by the action caused by the medicine recommended—and taken before the real nature of the sickness was recognized. The deadly pus from the abscess has been scattered through a large, complicated, wormlike intestine, where it will lodge and kill the patient unless it is washed out, all of it, even down to a piece the size of a pin point.

The pus germs are so small that they cannot be seen with the naked eye, but they are born by the hundreds every minute.

A knife very often has a double edge and so have drugs. A headache powder will relieve the ache for the time being and at the same time weaken an already weak heart and in some cases cause death. It is only the medical profession that recognizes the great harm people do themselves by the indiscriminate use of drugs.

Those quack medicines and published books for home treatment, those advertisements of doctors who treat patients through correspondence, either by letter or newspaper; those druggists and nurses who prescribe on guess work, all represent part of a great evil. The rash and dangerous habit of recommending drugs for a sick person when little or nothing is known about his real condition is a crime that should receive fitting punishment.

Test of the Metal

By George Haskeil

(Copyright, by W. G. Chapman.)

"I'm going to branch out. This one horse town may be well enough for the old settlers, but it's no field for a fellow with bigger ideas."

Arthur Bellows tossed his cigarette over the rail of the piazza upon which he was sitting and looked extremely sure of himself and his future achievements. He was young, good looking, fashionably dressed, and the girl in the broad willow chair sitting near him seemed to regard him and his prospects with the same favorable estimate.

Tom Cropsey, at the other side of the porch, about the same age as Bellows, less prepossessing in appearance, but with a strong, honest face that inspired confidence, looked at him more dubiously and said quietly: "Well, Welton is growing. I believe it's going to be some town."

"Maybe in a hundred years or so," laughed Bellows. "If you want to stay and grow-up with it, all right."

The girl's laugh, and agreement at this remark cut in a bit with Cropsey, but he let neither of them see the hurt, answering in the same untroubled way: "I don't think it's going to be quite that long. But if I find myself growing up ahead of the place, and getting too big for the town, I can get out into a more roomy pasture. It'll be time enough then."

"You might be too old by that time," said the girl, Jessie Faber by name.

"If it takes me that long to find it out, yes," he answered.

It wouldn't have taken a very close observer to have noticed that the two young fellows were both considerably in love with Jessie Faber, upon whose piazza they were sitting in the early June evening, each wishing the other several miles away. Hitherto they had received from the girl about equal encouragement, and did not know very surely just where they stood in her regard. This was because Jessie herself did not know. She had for some little time been trying to decide. This evening the enterprising spirit, and the determination to cut loose from the the city where Arthur Bellows was living. Bellows met Jessie at the station and took her to her destination.

On the way he said laughingly: "Your friend Miss Carter has a good-looking brother. If I find he's trying to cut in on me, there'll be trouble."

When the girl protested, he added: "Oh, he'll try it, all right," and he proceeded to warn her against George Carter.

Jessie, by Bellows's invitation, often met him downtown, and they dined at some restaurant and went to the theater or other amusements afterwards. She also went out occasionally with Anne Carter and her brother. One day Anne asked her if she were engaged to Bellows. When she admitted she was, her friend said: "Jessie, if I didn't think so much of you I wouldn't say this—it isn't easy. But I think you ought to know. Arthur Bellows is going a pretty rapid pace, drink, chorus girls and all the rest of it. He can't afford it, and he's borrowing money everywhere he can."

Quite naturally Jessie fired up, refused to believe it, and asked Anne where she had gotten her information. Anne reluctantly replied it was from her brother. Jessie remembered her fiancé's warning about young Carter and decided to wait for further proofs.

Shortly after this Carter took the two girls to dine at a cafe rather different than those to which Jessie had been going. There was singing and dancing such as she had not before seen. At a table not far from them sat two girls very much painted, very conspicuous in dress, and whose loud laughter drew all eyes in their direction. Jessie, disgusted with their coarseness and vulgarity, was about to look away, when the man with them, whose back had been toward her, turned to speak to the waiter, and she saw it was Arthur Bellows. She could scarcely touch the food before her, and the meal, over, they left without Bellows having known they were there.

Her eyes now being opened, she began to notice the change in Bellows that she had not seen before, and went home convinced that her friend was right. Her mother had news for her. Tom Cropsey had bought out the business, but her old position was still open if she wished it. More news was to the effect that Tom was seen of late so much with Mary Parker, going about with her in her car that people were beginning to say they were engaged. Mary Parker's father was about the richest man in town, and everyone thought it would be a pretty good match, now that Cropsey seemed to be getting on so well.

Jessie took her old position at the desk. She noticed a good many changes. Things were being brought up more to date. She had taken note of some windows in the city, and she suggested a new way of window dressing to Cropsey. He gave her full swing in the arrangement, and was delighted with the effect, offering to raise her salary if she would take charge of the windows.

"I suppose, though," he added, "you'll not want to be doing it very long." She turned away without answering him. Then he noticed her hand. He caught at it, asking quickly: "Where is your ring?"

"I gave it back to him. But," she added, "how can that concern you. I hear you are going to marry Miss Parker."

"Nonsense!" he laughed. "I've been attending to some business for her. She's engaged to a congressman. Why, Jessie, you look almost glad!"

"It's more than 'almost,'" she answered in a low voice. "I've been a great fool, but I've learned a great lesson."

Then Tom asked if the lesson left any room for loving him, and the answer seemed rather satisfactory, he dined that evening with Mrs. Faber.

TOAD FRIEND OF GARDENER

Little Creature Should Be Coaxed to Stay, and is Always Well Worth Its Keep.

When in your gardening you come across a toad, don't cry out against the "ugly thing" and drive it away. A toad in the garden is worth its weight in gold. Treasure it; coax it to stay. Toads are easily tamed and love to have their back scratched. A little gentleness and patience, and he will allow you to pull weeds or hoe around him without being alarmed. A toad looks stupid and one can scarcely call it beautiful, but if one watches it closely he will find much to interest him. Watch it a while and you may see a long, slender tongue thrust forth and in the fraction of a second an insect has disappeared. There is nothing, unless it be a garter snake, that will destroy so many harmful insects in so short a time without doing harm to anything else. Most persons prefer the toad to the snake, but no harm is done if you keep both in your garden patch. Encourage them to live in your garden. Observing their ways and realizing the good they do, you will learn to feel kindly toward these creatures so generally despised.

Man is dependent on creatures usually considered useless by those who fail to think deeply. Without the birds which some thoughtlessly kill, and these still less considered reptiles, fruit nor grain nor any green thing would prosper.—Milwaukee Journal.

Canadians have captured the Cite du Moulin, the last suburb between Reservoir Hill and Lens in a day light attack after learning that the Prussians only manned the place at night.

Dealing With Troubles.

We shrink instinctively from trouble as we shrink from hard and painful tasks; we cannot escape the sufferings they bring; but we decide whether they shall weaken or strengthen us. It lies with us to receive them as enemies or as friends. They offer us fortitude, patience, courage, strength, growth or cowardice, bitterness, despair; we cannot prevent them from coming to us, but we can decide whether they shall help or hinder us in our life purposes.

THE GAZETTE $1.50 A YEAR

"May Be in a Hundred Years or So," narrow confines of Welton which came out in Bellows tipped the balance decidedly in his favor.

Cropsey was only a clerk in a department store. To be sure it was the largest, most important shop in town; but that was not saying much, and did not cut any figure compared to a professional career in a large city, for Bellows had taken a law course and intended to practice his profession.

Before leaving, Bellows had asked the girl to wait till he got started, and he would come back for her, and she had promised. A very small diamond flashed on the third finger of her left hand.

Then came the first great sorrow of her life. Her father died. When his affairs were settled, it was found that financially things were in a bad shape. There were two younger children, and Jessie decided that she must do something to help with the family income. It was here that Tom Cropsey came to her aid. He secured for her a position as cashier in the store where he was employed. All through the trying days of her father's illness, and the sadder days that followed, he had been a faithful and considerate friend, though he knew now he could be nothing more, and the mother and children welcomed his coming as though he were one of their own. Mrs. Faber began to wish Jessie had chosen the man she had learned to respect and to regard almost with a mother's tenderness, but the girl was still unwavering in her devotion to Bellows, who wrote frequent letters of affectionate regard.

Jessie had worked steadily for six months, and when she was given her vacation decided to visit a friend in

USE POISONED BAIT FOR GRASSHOPPERS

YOUNG GRASSHOPPERS FEEDING ON CLOVER.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

If grasshoppers are discovered in the early days of their attack on crops, they may be easily controlled by means of poisoned baits, the most effective of which is described below. This method has been used with remarkable success in many parts of the United States, its complete effectiveness depending only upon the discovery of the young insects before they have attained any considerable size, when the injury done by them is still very slight and when they are wingless and easily killed by poisons or mechanical means.

The constituents of a good poisoned bait are wheat bran, 25 pounds; paris green, 1 pound, or white arsenic, 1 pound; lemons or oranges, 6, finely chopped; low-grade molasses, such as refuse from sugar factories, or cattle molasses, known as "black strap," 2 quarts; water, 2 to 4 gallons. The bran and paris green or other arsenical are thoroughly mixed while dry, the fruits finely chopped and added, and lastly the molasses and water are poured over the bait and the whole thoroughly kneaded. A coarse-flaked bran is most desirable, although where this cannot be obtained easily ordinary middlings or alfalfa meal may be substituted; a low-grade, strong-smelling sirup or molasses, however, is essential to the entire success of the poison. Crushed ripe tomatoes, watermelons, or limes may be substituted for the lemons or oranges, if necessary. Ordinary powdered white arsenic (arsenious acid) contains nearly twice as much arsenic as paris green and is comparatively low in price. The powdered form of arsenate of lead may be used, but in this case twice as much of it must be used as of the paris green. In California and other semi-arid regions water should be added to the bait at the rate of at least 4 gallons to 25 pounds of bran, as in these climates the bait dries out very rapidly and the extra moisture is necessary in order to attract the grasshoppers.

The poisoned-bran bait is distributed over the infested fields by sowing broadcast, either on foot or from a light wagon or buggy. In applying the bait in orchards, care must be taken to avoid distributing it close to the trees, because severe injury to fruit trees occasionally results from heavy applications of arsenical poisons.

The time of day chosen for distributing the poisoned baits has an important bearing upon the results secured. In California and other semi-arid regions the bait should be distributed in late afternoon or early evening, just before the grasshoppers ascend the plants on which they usually pass the night. They are apparently hungry and thirsty at this time and greedily take the bait, if it be available. In the moist portions of the country, such as New England and Florida, the bait is best applied in the early morning, before sunrise if possible. Farmers should not be discouraged if the grasshoppers do not drop dead immediately upon eating the poison, as it usually takes 24 hours or more for the full effect of the bait to become apparent.

Further information in regard to grasshoppers and their control may be secured from Farmers' Bulletin 747, which will be furnished free to those applying to the department of agriculture.

FIGHTING PESTS IN GARDEN

War Gardeners Must Battle Host of Insects That Never Seem to Know When Whipped.

All summer you war gardeners must fight the host of insect pests that never seem to know when they are whipped. Here are a few hints for the campaign:

Tomato worms.—Pick or spray with arsenate of lead.

Cabbage worms.—Pick or spray with arsenate of lead plus soap.

Cucumber beetles.—Cover with frames; apply tobacco dust or spray with arsenate of lead. For immature forms and roots apply nicotine sulphate.

Cutworms attack tomatoes, cabbages, beans, onions. Apply poison bait, place tin or paper collars around plants, hand pick.

Potato beetles attack potatoes, egg plants, tomatoes. Hand pick and apply arsenate of lead.

Aphis (plant lice) attack cabbage groups and other plants. Spray with a solution of hard soap or nicotine sulphate plus soap.

SUPERIOR PASTURE FOR PIGS

Acres of Rape Sown on Good Land Will Carry From Twenty-Five to Forty Animals.

Rape will stand quite a heavy frost without any apparent injury.

When cutting for soiling care should be taken to cut about four inches from the ground, and a second and even a third crop can be expected from the same seedlings.

It makes the finest pasture for brood sows and pigs. An acre sown on good land will carry from 25 to 40 pigs from June to October, if handled properly.

REST REQUIRED BY HORSES

During Noon Hour Harness and Heavy Collars Should Be Removed—Give Animals Brushing.

Remove the harness and heavy collars during the noon hour. Go over the horses with a stiff brush before replacing the harness. This will take only a few minutes, but will go a long way in keeping the team in good condition and full of nervous force.

POWDER GUNS FOR SPRAYING

Potatoes Can Be Covered With Fine Dust While Damp and Bugs Will Eat Themselves to Death.

Powder guns have long been in use on some farms, but it seems to me that they might be used a good deal more than they are, says a writer in an exchange. In the first place let me say that a powder or dust sprayer is usually a bellows with handles attached so that a man can stand upright and have the business end of the bellows near the plant or vine he wants to treat with poison.

A good-sized one holds about a quart of mixture. The mixture is usually composed of powdered lime and a poison of whatever kind you want to use. If we want to use Paris green, we usually take about one part of it to ten parts of lime and mix it well before putting in the blower. A funnel is best to load with as it is expensive stuff to spill around on the ground. Sometimes people use flour and paris green, or flour and hellebore, or flour and powdered arsenate of lead. It depends on which you like best and what the particular work is. However, lately the flour is so expensive that it doesn't pay to use it except in very small quantities.

SUGAR-BEET SEED REQUIRED

Not Less Than 150,000 Bags of 110 Pounds Each Needed—Big Shortage Is Apparent.

The present seed requirements of the beet-sugar industry in this country are annually not less than 150,000 bags of 100 pounds each. In order to insure this quantity of seed, it would be necessary to have not less than 16,000 acres devoted to seed production. Less than one-fourth of this acreage was harvested in 1916.

CAREFUL WITH PARIS GREEN

When Cabbage Begins to Head Up Poison Should Not Be Applied, as Some May Be Left Behind.

Cabbage, when it commences to head up, should not be sprayed or dusted with paris green, as enough of the green may be left in the heart of the cabbage to poison the one eating the raw cabbage.

Pig that Disrupted the Town

By Alice E. Ives

(Copyright, by W. G. Chapman.)

When little Mrs. Wiley moved into the small town of Norton and rented a cottage with a bit of ground quite on the outskirts, she nor nobody else had any idea that she would cause a nine-days' sensation and nearly disrupt the town. She had two or three friends in the place who could vouch for her perfect respectability, for she had been born in a nearby town, not thirty miles from Norton. She said she wanted the peace and quiet of the country, and did not seem to care much for going about socially. Ten years before she had gone up to the city a bride, but for three years she had been a widow, and since coming to Norton she had lived quite alone in the little cottage, with Roger, the collie dog, for companion and guardian of the premises.

Vida Wiley being fair of face, trim of figure, always neatly dressed, and still not much beyond the mid-thirties, quite naturally caused some of the male contingent to take notice, but she did not much encourage their advances. One man, however, frequently found entrance, and that was Avery Grice, though he always came with his sister, Miss Anna Grice, who was an old friend of Vida's. Still, even this highly respectable visitation set the town tongues a-wagging, it being generally opined that Mr. Avery Grice would in time find his way alone to the widow's.

On moving to the cottage, Vida's first care was to provide Roger with a kennel. It was painted green, neatly kept, and the collie soon became very much at home in his new lodgings. One day Vida was attracted by low growls from the dog coming from the back yard. She went out to find who the intruder was. She could see no one. Looking for Roger, she found him standing in front of his kennel, peering in, and continuing the growls. After getting him away from the entrance, she looked in. A small pig in possession eyed her from the back of the kennel. Roger gave her an imploring whine, wagged his tail, and pig, but I didn't bother. He's only a runt, and never'll amount to anything. So he's been stopping over here. Now I tell you, Mrs. Wiley, if he comes around again, you just give him to anyone that wants him. I don't care what you do with him," and he laughed and went on.

"Goodness!" exclaimed Vida to her guests, "I don't know what to do with the pig!"

"He seems to be such an unusually intelligent porker, you might train him to be an educated pig," observed Grice. "You might make money out of exhibiting him."

This glittering prospect did not appeal to Mrs. Wiley, and the next day, when old Briggs, who did odd jobs for her, appeared, she asked him if he did not want the pig. He eagerly accepted. Anything in the nature of a gift was never refused by Hiram Briggs. The next day Vida went to the city for a week's visit, having made arrangements with Briggs to look after the dog. She was just fitting her key into her front door, on her return, when Mrs. Phelps, the dressmaker, stopped in front of the house, and spoke to her. "My! you just got home?" she inquired. On being assured that this was the case, she went on. "S'pose you hain't got yer s'peeny yet?"

Vida looked blank, and asked what she meant by "s'peeny."

"Why, one o' them papers that gets ya before the judge an' the court," she explained. "They was lookin' fer ya with one."

Vida's amazed expression prompted Mrs. Phelps to say: "Why, hain't ya heard nothing?"

Vida assured her she had not, and invited her in.

"My land! such goin's on as there's been, an' all on account o' that pig!" "Pig?" exclaimed Vida.

"Yes, you see Hiram Briggs said you give it to him. Wal, he took it home, and it kept up such a squealin'. Miss Alkin, next door, bein' sort o' cranky an' nervous, made such a row that Hiram goes and tells Jake Flynn about it, an' he puts it up to Hiram to get up a raffle for him, right there in the grocery, an' he starts in sellin' shares on that pig fer fifty cents a share. Wal, if he didn't take in ten dollars fer that pig, nobody havin' seen it, an' not knowin' it was a runt. When the raffle come off, Joel Stone, he drew the pig. Joel's an awful good-natured feller, an' instead o' bein' mad at bein' took in that way, he jest about laughed his head off, an' he set Jake to startin' another raffle, sayin' he wanted to help Hiram to get some new clothes, an' he was willin' to put up the pig again. Wal, my conscience! it was passin' belief to see how another lot of suckers bit at the bait, an' Jake had got in another ten dollars, an' invited the folks to the drawin', when in walks Henry Spears, an' stops everything. He yells out that he is the owner of the pig, an' all that money belongs to him. Then Hiram he ups an' says you give him the pig, an' he can prove it. An' old Spears says he'd like to see how he was goin' to do it. You see he knowed you was gone, and he laid out to get that money fer the pig all right.

"Wal, if that mean old skinflint didn't go an' get Hiram arrested, an' hauled up to court. But Hiram, he remembered how them folks, that Mr. Grice an' his sister, sot out on your porch, and heard you tell him to take the pig, an' he got them for witnesses. Wal, everything was comin' fine fer Spears, an' dead ag'in Hiram at the trial, when Mr. Grice got mad, an' he ups and tells the judge that Hiram was all right in takin' the pig, and it was give to you all right, an' you'd had trouble enough with that pig to collect damages from Spears. And he ends by callin' Spears a skinflinty old hippycrit. Well, then the judge he pounces on him, an' fines him ten dollars fer contempt o' court. Grice ain't more'n paid his fine when he lights in, and gives Spears another slam, and when the judge tries to shut him up, he goes on to tell what he thinks of the brains an' the justice of the hull court as it shows off in the town of Norton. Then Mr. Grice he gets fined another ten dollars, an' the trial o' Hiram Briggs gets sort o' forgotten, and sidetracked in the trial o' Mr. Grice fer contempt o' court. Pretty soon the judge, seemin' to think the finin' o' Mr. Grice is gettin' monotonous, adjourns the court. Wal, when the judge comes out, Mr. Grice is layin' fer him, an' he steps up, an' says: 'Court's over now, I s'pose,' an' the judge tucks that in. Then Mr. Grice fetches him one in the eye, an' the judge hits back, an' there's no knowin' what might have happened if some men hadn't got between 'em. . . . The judge couldn't hold court the next day, it not lookin' jest right to be on the bench with a black eye. Everybody's talkin', an' takin' sides, an' gettin' into scraps. Yes, the town's jest all ripped up over that pig."

"I think," said Vida quietly, "I can straighten this out."

Vida appeared promptly in court the next day. The judge was wearing a shade over his right eye, but as she entered his quick look changed to a long, steady stare. He seemed to recognize her. She gave her testimony in a few well-chosen words, and the case was decided for Hiram Briggs, Spears having to pay the cost of proceedings.

After it was all over the judge came to Vida. "Isn't this the one who used to be Vida Gould?" he asked.

"Why, yes," she said, and then, as though memory dawned: "Why, you are David Hards, who used to draw me to school on your sleigh."

"Yes," he said.

After that it began to look as though Grice and the judge were making a close running for the widow's heart. His sister seems to think Grice is ahead, and she is liable to know.

Took Him Away Amidst Vociferous Squeals.

awaited the eviction of the undesirable tenant. As plainly as dog language could speak, he informed her he felt it entirely beneath his dignity as a thoroughbred, to say nothing of his forbearance for a thing so much smaller than himself, to use violence in dragging it forth.

Vida with some difficulty drew forth the pig, put him out in the road, and brushed out the kennel. Roger sniffed fastidiously at the interior, but concluded to make the best of it, and settled down for a nap. Again the next day growls drew her out to the kennel, and again she had to get out the pig, and clean up the premises. A pig is liable to do more damage to flower beds and growing vegetables in the process of being driven out of a garden than a full grown cow, owing to his having no understanding of being driven, so Vida found it easier to carry him out. To be sure he was a very small pig, but her neat look or apron generally suffered from the contact. Like Roger, she could not hurt the little animal, especially such an unusual pig, who evidently preferred nice, clean quarters to those provided for the rest of his family. Vida found that the pig belonged to Mr. Henry Spears, who lived a few rods down the road. Mr. Spears was a leading light in the Presbyterian church, and a very respectable citizen.

Of course he would not wish her to be annoyed this way, and Vida determined to tell him about it, and to try to see him that evening. As luck would have it, Avery Grice and his sister came to see her, and she could not go to Spears' home; but as they sat outside, Mr. Spears came along, and Vida called him. He came to them, and on Vida asking him if he would not take care of the pig answered: "Well, now! I missed that

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

BY REV. P. E. FITZWATER, D. D.,
Teacher of English Bible in the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.
(Copyright, 1917, Western Newspaper Union.)

LESSON FOR AUGUST 12

JOSIAH'S GOOD REIGN.

LESSON TEXT—II Chronicles 34:1-2.
GOLDEN TEXT—Remember, how thy Creator in the days of thy youth—Eccles. 12:1.

The reign of Josiah is in striking and pleasing contrast with that of many of his predecessors, especially that of his father, Amon, and grandfather, Manasseh.

I. Time of Beginning (v. 1). He ascended the throne when only eight years of age. At this tender age he evidently had a sense of the import of the service of God's house. This sense must have been strong to enable him to withstand the corrupt influences of his surroundings. The prevailing idolatry influenced this boy, but influenced him in the opposite way in which boys are usually influenced. It aroused his hatred for it. This serves to demonstrate the fact that circumstances do not necessarily determine the direction a life may go. Each individual has the ability to determine the course of his life; and moreover, his responsibility so to do. It is a most perilous thing to be thrust into such a prominent position while so young. However, sometimes such responsibility has a sobering effect, calling forth one's latent powers. That his aspiration for God and the right was genuine is proven by the fact that he persisted therein for thirty-one years.

II. The Character of His Reign (v. 2). "He did that which was right in the sight of the Lord, and walked in the ways of David his father, and declined neither to the right hand nor to the left." He not only maintained outward order and decorum as to the worship of God, but doubtless at heart desired to please God.

III. Josiah's Reformation in the Kingdom (vv. 3-7). He first set out to root out idolatry from the land. This was a prodigious task, requiring great courage and skill. He did this with a strong hand. "Without pity he swept out from the land these abominations. In the execution of this task he—

1. Broke down the altars of Baalim (v. 4). This form of idolatry was first brought into the land by Jezebel when she married Ahab. The images seem to have been such as would appeal to the sensual nature of men; therefore it was but natural that the grossest licentious practices should be associated with this worship.

2. He broke in pieces the groves, carved images, and molten images (v. 4). He even made dust of them and strewed it upon the graves of those who had been offering unto them.

3. He burned the bones of the priests on their altars (v. 5). He not only showed no pity for them, but he manifested a decided fierceness in the execution of his task.

4. He extended this destruction to certain districts in the northern kingdom. It was not until all this was done that he returned to Jerusalem (vv. 6, 7). His reformation thus began at home, but was extended to the widest extent of his kingdom.

IV. Josiah Repaired the Temple (vv. 8-13). Having rid the land of its idolatry, he set himself to the repairing of the temple which had been so long neglected. This neglect, coupled with gross abuses at times, made it to be sadly in need of attention.

1. His deputies (v. 8). This work he entrusted to a committee of three—Shaphan, the royal secretary (II Kings 22:3); Maseiah, mayor of Jerusalem; and Joah, the recorder, the historian of the nation. In the matter of ridding the city and country of idolatry Josiah took the lead in person, but now the work had gone far enough forward that he could work by deputy. He chose his deputies from among "laymen" instead of the priests.

2. Method of procedure (vv. 9-13). (a) Collection of money (v. 9). It would seem that for some time collection of money for temple repairs had been going on. Perhaps it was begun in connection with the destruction of idolatry some six years before. The agents in this work were the Levites. They collected it from all over the kingdom, even giving the remnant of Israel an opportunity for fellowship in this matter. This shows us that religious interests of the people should be sustained by all the people adhering thereto.

(b) Money placed into the treasury (v. 9). Hilkiah, the high priest, was the treasurer. From this treasury the overseers drew the money and paid it to the workmen who repaired the temple.

(c) The overseers (v. 12). Among the overseers were certain skilled musicians. The duty of these overseers was to exercise supervision over the carpenters, builders, and other artisans, and the helpers of all classes. The musicians, by skillful music, incited the workman to diligence and activity, thus lightening the burdens of their toil. Music in the soul while working bears a very vital relationship to the work itself.

8. The character of the work (v. 12). They did the work faithfully. This is a fine thing to be said of a set of workmen.

MORE VEGETABLES IN FAVOR

Fresh Garden Truck Should Form Part of Everyone's Diet—Reduce High Cost of Living.

(By W. E. EDMUNDSON, Idaho Experiment Station.)

Fresh garden vegetables should furnish a large part of everyone's diet, and if produced at home are not expensive. Abundantly used in the diet, they will aid in forming a balanced ration and will greatly assist in reducing the high cost of living. While we are planting the gardens this year everyone should make a special effort to grow special vegetables for winter use. No less than 80 distinct kinds of vegetables can be preserved for winter use by proper methods of storing, canning and pickling. The vegetables most commonly canned are tomatoes, corn, peas and string beans. Those most commonly preserved by pickling are cauliflower, cucumbers, green peppers and green tomatoes. There are many vegetables that may be kept in the fresh state by proper storage methods. This list includes potatoes, beets, carrots, turnips, parsnips, winter radishes, rutabagas, cabbage, kohlrabi, celery, onions, pumpkins and squashes. Since most vegetables usually keep best if put into storage comparatively late, it should be the aim of the gardener to mature the vegetables for winter use late in the season. If planted too early many crops will become tough, woody and pithy before the season for storage arrives.

INSECT INJURIES TO CROPS

Great Part of Annual Loss Can Be Prevented by Vigilance and Action on Part of Growers.

Be on the job against insect pests this season. Make your food contribution to the human family, not the insect family. Farmers who provide themselves with insect poisons and then keep a vigil for the first outbreaks of crop enemies will bring through the largest yields. Failure to detect an outbreak at its beginning and delay in getting combative material may be fatal to the crop attacked, warn entomologists in the United States department of agriculture.

That a great part of the annual loss to grain crops due to insect injuries can be avoided by vigilance and vigorous action on the part of growers is not sufficiently realized, the entomologists say. Frequently insect outbreaks originate within a limited area, and when this is the case it is often quite possible to stamp them out before any great damage has been done. If the outbreak is general, then community action is essential to prevent the infestation from becoming widespread.

PULLING STAKES AND POSTS

Mechanism Is in Form of Pivotaly Connected Open Frames Adapted to Be Slipped Over Post.

The Scientific American in illustrating and describing a fence post and stake puller, invented by R. S. Fox of Blue Earth, Minn., says:

This inventor provides a device especially adapted for pulling posts, stakes and the like from the ground, wherein the pulling mechanism is in the form of pivotally connected open frames adapted to be slipped over the post, each frame having at one end a gripping mechanism for engaging the post stake, and at the other end a handle.

Stake and Post Puller.

WHITEWASH IS EASILY MADE

Formula Given for Preparation of Weather-Proof Solution for Farm Fences and Walls.

(By DR. C. FRANCIS.) Slake one bushel of good quicklime with not more than 12 gallons of water. Slake the lime and keep the vessel covered until steam ceases to rise, stirring occasionally to prevent scorching. Prepare a second mixture containing two pounds common salt and one pound zinc sulphate in two gallons of boiling water. Pour this into the slaked lime and stir in two gallons of skim milk. Stir vigorously. This makes an excellent weather-proof whitewash, suitable for walls and fences.

EXCELLENT AS LICE KILLER

Kerosene Emulsion Is Easily Prepared and Not Expensive—Best to Use Rain Water.

Kerosene emulsion is one of the best lice killers on plants and animals. It is easily prepared and very cheap. Dissolve one-half pound of soap in one gallon of kerosene and stir very vigorously or, better yet, churn with a force pump for a few minutes. For use, dilute one gallon with nine to ten gallons of water. Stir well. It is best to use rain water. If only a small quantity is wanted, use one to two ounces of soap, two quarts of boiling water and one pint of kerosene, and dilute to two gallons.

HANDY LOW-WHEELED WAGON

Handy for Use in Harvesting of Corn for Silage—Large Saving of Manual Labor.

A wagon with low wheels for use in the harvesting of corn for silage is recommended by H. C. Ramsower of the college of agriculture, Ohio State university. Although the draft is approximately one-third greater than that of a higher-wheeled wagon, the saving of man labor is of greater importance. Aside from its use in the handling of silage, it can be of great advantage for many other farm operations.
